About This Study

Introduction

Driving Student Success Through Student-Driven Measures

Which student retention practices do public colleges and universities use the most? Which are the most effective? Where are the best opportunities to improve student retention and completion?

RNL polled campus retention leaders to answer these questions. This report collects data from 64 institutions on a wide variety of retention practices.

More opportunities to inform retention strategies with data

Campus retention goals are only as effective as the strategies that support them. Those strategies also need data to inform them and guide decision making. Our poll shows that public colleges and universities are missing an opportunity to collect data that can strengthen retention policies.

93% of respondents set measurable goals for college completion rates.

58% use an incoming student assessment to identify students' needs.

70% leverage statistical modeling to predict the likelihood of an incoming student persisting to degree completion incoming student persisting to degree completion.

More opportunities to have an up-to-date retention plan

Achieving your desired retention goals starts with a comprehensive student success plan. While most institutions have a retention plan and retention committees, the majority do not have plans that cover the first four terms.

72% of institutions have a retention/student success committee.

22% of those committees are empowered to empowered to make decisions that impact student success.

of public institutions have a position charged with leading retention efforts.

More opportunities to explore strengthening student success

Our poll results can provide helpful context for conversations about student success at your institution, such as:

- What does student success look like at your institution?
- What gaps exist in your current efforts?
- Do you have a committee in place to execute the plan, and are its members empowered to make decisions and effect change?

Consider using this report to perform an informal audit of your current practices, noting practices that you have in place, and highlighting those that you can consider in your retention efforts.

About this study

Source of data and methodology

Data in this report reflect responses from 64 four-year public institutions that collectively enroll approximately 718,149 undergraduate students (according to data reported to IPEDS). Respondents participated in the RNL national electronic poll of "Effective Practices for Student Success, Retention, and Completion" between January 17 and March 4, 2023. The poll was emailed to student affairs, academic affairs, and retention officers at accredited, degree-granting institutions across the United States.

To report the findings as accurately as possible, the rankings of effectiveness were based only on the relative effectiveness options that were given to respondents: "very effective," "somewhat effective," and "minimally effective," rather than including the fourth response, "practice not used.
